Aims

Following on the successful 11th ICCG in Paramaribo, Suriname in 2019, this conference will present the latest findings on the tectonics, minerals and energy resources, and regolith of the Guiana Shield and the wider NE South American Region. The outcomes of this meeting will underpin discussions about future collaborative research programs in the region.

Who should attend

This conference offers the opportunity for companies, geological surveys, development agencies and researchers to define key future research and training activities that will ultimately provide not only new geological information but also a new geological framework and exploration insights. This conference is also an opportunity to meet like-minded people from various countries who share the same interest.

Abstracts

Abstracts may be on any geoscience topic related to the Guiana Shield and neighbouring terranes, should be between 1-4 pages, and may contain images and figures.

Please download the example abstract from the 11th IGGC (available on the SAXI website) and follow the formatting styles displayed within. All submissions as Word format docs with embedded figures to corinne.debat@uwa.edu.au
